Increasing interest in museums and galleries, there are a lot of museums and galleries spread all around the world. Let's analyze the situation regarding national museums and galleries in England, so we can draw on our papers and in our minds the full picture of what's happening.

Recently, the rate of visitors to the British Museum has increased. Respectively, both National Gallery and Tate Gallery show the same results. However, the Natural History Museum and the Science Museum have experienced a drop of visitors since introducing admission charges. But in 2014 the situation ~~just~~ got better and more people visited these museums, despite the charges. So, if we compare museums with free entry and the ones with charges, we can see that people visit free museums more often. Another thing to point out is that people visit museums and galleries more often than they used to. Also, it's worth to notice that the British Museum, is compared to others, has the highest amount of visitors. Personally, I want to give 2 advices to improve the current situation. The first one is that all museums and galleries should have free entry to increase the appeal of these places. The second one is that these places must receive substantial amount of money from the government to allow free entry and new exhibitions.

All in all, museums and galleries are important as they help us in learning new things.
