I have conducted a research on the attendance rate of museums and galleries. After summarizing the collected information I have gotten some interesting results.

Out of the five museums I have considered the attendance rate has risen in three places. The British Museum has the highest visiting rate, which has overall increased by 3 mln people. On the second place is The National Gallery with 2.1 mln. Tate Gallery is on the third with its attendance increasing by 1.3 mln. The other two museums, however, have both experienced a decrease in the number of visitors, which fell by 1.8 mln and 2.2 mln. for the Natural History Museum and 2.2 mln for the Science Museum.

The attendance rate has dropped most likely because the museums have introduced admission charges in 2014. I would recommend for the ticket prices to be respectively lowered or even completely removed for the tickets to be removed, if possible. I would also suggest for the Natural History and Science Museums to change their expositions to appeal more to the public, as it seems to be interested in Art and History more now.

Based on the data acquired I have drawn on several conclusions. Firstly, the museum attendance rate seems to closely depend on the price of the tickets. The cheaper they are, the higher the attendance. Lastly, there has been a substantial shift in the interests of the society. It is interested in humanitarian sciences more than in natural ones. I hope the observations I made will be useful.
